SCOTCH PINE DATA

FOR

CHRISTMAS TREE GROWERS

WHAT ARE THE BEST STRAINS: No one seems to have the answer to this important question. While one particular strain may do well in a certain region, it may not fare as well in another. State Forestry departments, Christmas tree growers and others are trying to follow the present sources in the field. It is hoped that within a matter of 5 to 10 years some definite information will be available.

WHAT STRAINS SHOW THE BEST COLOR: Strains from the Baltic countries which include Norway, Sweden, Finland and parts of Poland, etc. are the extreme types, both as to slower rate of growth and yellowing during the winter in this climate. Strains from the extreme Southern types including parts of France, Germany, Yugoslavia, Austria, Italy and Spain are faster growing and retain a more green or bluish-green color.

WHAT STRAINS SHOW THE BEST FORM: While the strains from the Baltic countries tend to grow the tallest and retain the best form, they are also the poorest for winter color. Scotch pine in its native range grows from the extreme Northern part of Europe down to the tip of Southern Italy. Generally in the Southern advance, form becomes poorer as the color quality increases.

GENERAL CONCLUSIONS: Since winter colors are the deciding factor to good Christmas trees, the following observations have been the general rule on most cold weather inspections on American plantations:

1. Decidedly blue-green: Belgium, Holland, Spain and Scotland
2. Bluish-green: Baltic States, coastal Germany and Holland
3. Light blue-green: South Poland, Hungary, Germany, Central Europe, Northern Italy and Roumania
4. Dark green: Italy, Southern Germany, Austria and Yugoslavia
5. Dull yellowish-green: Central Sweden, Poland and extreme Northern Germany
6. Yellow-green: North Finland, Sweden and Norway
